

THEATRICAL DEATH EXTRAORDINARY.—The public will learn with a regret equal to that which we feel in announcing it, that the theatrical world has experienced a heavy and, it is to be feared, irreparable loss in the decease of an actress of great promise, and one who bade fair to shine as a star of the first magnitude in the dramatic hemisphere. The kangaroo expired at her apartments in Drury-lane Theatre, on Saturday morning, after a short but severe illness, borne with great fortitude and resignation. Much sympathy is excited for the situation of her sole surviving child (now an orphan), who continues inconsolable. Mr. Wallack, with a degree of feeling which does him honour, is prodigal of his attentions, and has done all on this melancholy occasion that could be expected from him as a manager or a man.
